Global security companies and their smaller Chinese rivals are jostling for business along Beijing's modern-day "Silk Road," the grandiose plan for land and sea routes connecting the world's second-largest economy with the rest of Asia and beyond. Representing investments of hundreds of billions of dollars, the pet project of Chinese President Xi Jinping is expected to boost economic growth at home.

Security firms also expect to tap the rush, offering to protect thousands of Chinese workers - and the pipelines, roads, railways, and power plants they build - as they fan out across the world under the "One Belt, One Road" (OBOR) initiative.
