Michal Moroz, Deputy Minister of the Interior of the Czech Republic

ASIS International has held its 10th European Security Conference & Exhibition on 3-6 April 2011 at the Messe Wien in Vienna, Austria. The event gathered 360 senior security managers from 44 countries.

The conference was opened by Michal Moroz, Deputy Minister of the Interior of the Czech Republic, who outlined the Czech Government's plans to combat corruption.

On the second day, Hugh McLeod, MBE, Chief Operating Officer of Stirling Assynt explained the geopolitics and game changers regarding the Arab uprisings.

The conference was closed by Brigadier Ian Abbott, OBE (ret.), Independent Member of the Thames Valley Police Authority who elaborated on the need for public-private partnerships in protecting critical infrastructure.

The conference featured 36 high-level educational sessions provided by speakers that included Rolf Rosenvinge Chief Security Officer of GE Global Banking Nordics on industrial espionage, Dr Christoph Rojahn, Senior Manager Forensic & Dispute Services of Deloitte AG on organised crime and Dr. Henriette Haas, Associate Professor in Forensic Psychology at the University of Zurich on improving de-escalation skills.

In addition, sessions designed especially for Chief Security Officers (CSOs) were organised by the CSO Roundtable, the ASIS forum for the most senior security professionals from the largest and most influential organisations in the world.

Commenting on the conference, Volker Wagner, Senior Vice President Group Business Security at Deutsche Telekom said "This was a real dynamic event. With the power and energy of the ASIS network we are able to develop security to a level which has even the potential to improve the competitiveness of our economies"

Matthias Ernst, Vice President Global Accounts of ADT Worldwide said: "ADT

As any security professional knows, new ideas and innovations are imperative to ensure that the most effective and efficient security measures are in place. Educational opportunities including programmes and events that highlight specific security issues and address broad security interests are extremely valuable to the industry. As such, security events that provide such possibilities are to be fully embraced.

ASIS members will be taking an active role in IFSEC 2011, as security professionals from across the globe descend on the world's largest annual security event, as it returns to NEC Birmingham, UK, from the 16-19 May 2011. Visitors from all disciplines within the security market can expect to gain a wealth of educational value, engage with key decision makers and industry experts and network with top-tier security professionals at this premier industry event.

This year's exhibition will see over 650 international security companies demonstrating the very latest security innovations to the industry. Spread over 6 product areas: Access Control, CCTV, Intruder Alarms, IP/Network Security, Public Security and Security Solutions, visitors will be able to compare and contrast cost effective solutions and conduct months of research with just one visit.

In addition, a range of educational show features will also be on the show floor. The Intelligent Integration Zone, sponsored by ISM, is a fully interactive show feature integrating security solutions into one graphical security control management system, the SITC Pavilion will demonstrate ground breaking security technologies for the end user, a Free Seminar Programme will contain a wealth of best practice case studies and in-depth product analysis, and the International Pavilions will host companies from around the world in central locations.

Guaranteed to be packed full of significant educational content, the IFSEC 2011 conference programme also covers corporate crime, cyber terrorism, retail security, IP-based technologies, business continuity management and transport security. Holders of the CPP, PSP and PSI certifications can claim 2 re-certification points for each module attended at IFSEC. ASIS are also offering additional points for those helping on the ASIS stand and will also be hosting a social function during the event.

Register for free entry worth £30 at www.ifsec.co.uk.

New Executive Education Programmes Address Core Business Concepts

ASIS two new Executive Education programmes present business concepts and strategies customised for mid-to-senior level security practitioners. As the complexity of security challenges have increased, ASIS members have realised a growing need for the knowledge and skills required to effectively communicate and translate security issues into strategies that have relevance in the boardroom. Delivered in partnership with two of the world's leading business schools, these programmes provide practical knowledge and abilities that can be readily applied.

Business Concepts for the Effective Security Manager will be held on 7-10 June 2011 (Deadline to register is 29 April 2011) on the campus of Northeastern University Boston, MA, USA.

Madrid-based IE Business School will deliver Effective Management for Security Professionals on 27-30 June (Deadline to register is 23 May 2011).

Cyber Attack on European Commission Reported

A serious cyber attack on the European Commission was reported on 23 March as EU leaders prepared to gather in Brussels for a two-day summit during which military intervention in Libya was expected to take centre stage.

The cyber attack was described as "serious" by a Commission spokesperson, who said that EU High Representative Catherine Ashton's services appeared to have been particularly affected.

The attack took place late on 23 March, hours before the two-day summit in Brussels at which economic issues were meant to dominate the agenda.

It remains unclear if the cyber attack is related to the Libya situation.

EU Rallies Behind UK on Collecting Air Passenger Data

As terrorists' travel routes become more complex, a majority of EU Member States are rallying behind a UK-led campaign to extend a proposal on collecting air passenger data to people travelling within Europe.

Negotiations on an EU proposal on passenger name records (PNR) recently took on a different shape, as Member States are being won over by British arguments that collecting data on air travel to destinations outside the bloc alone would leave a considerable security gap.

According to an EU paper, the UK proposal has struck a chord with many Member States, because countries fear they could miss out on a substantial amount of data on suspected terrorists, who are changing the way they travel.

"In 15 countries, more than 70% of the flights are intra-EU flights," the paper reads.

"Indeed, analyses made by counter-terrorism agencies demonstrate that terrorists often use EU hubs instead of direct international flights and that the complexity of their journeys has increased," the paper continues.

EU Commission Keen to Set Up New Counter-Terrorism Office

The European Commission is testing the water for creating a new EU internal security body on the model of Catherine Ashton's European External Action Service (EEAS).

Speaking at a European Parliament hearing in Brussels on 30 March, Commission Counter-Terrorism Director Olivier Luyckx envisaged a new entity that would pull together existing security agencies Cepad, Cosi, Eurojust, Europol and Frontex under EU Counter-Terrorism Co-ordinator Gilles de Kerchove.

"There is new room for action at EU level," he said. "This is how I see the change: to set up a system that would mirror the one that is being set up for monitoring external crises [in the EEAS], a one-stop shop for information-sharing."

Luyckx cited Guideline V on Operational Co-ordination of the EU's recently-adopted Internal Security Strategy as containing the "embryo" of the project: "Today, crisis centres in Member States share contacts and information on a voluntary and informal basis. We need to go a step further and to see, while respecting the division of labour set up in the EU treaty, how to make those linkages in a tighter way."

Reding Defines New EU Data Privacy Rules

In a speech on 16 March EU Justice Commissioner Viviane Reding spelled out new privacy rules for personal data held on the Internet, including a "right to be forgotten" that would allow users to permanently delete data held by companies.

Reding's proposals would overhaul the EU's 15 year-old Data Protection Directive. Her "four pillars" include urging more transparency from companies that process personal data, making privacy the default setting on websites and ensuring that all companies that operate in the European Union follow EU data protection rules.

"I am a firm believer in the necessity of enhancing individuals' control over their own data," she said.

The Commissioner also argued that EU rules should apply independently of where the servers holding data are geographically located, saying "homogeneous privacy standards for European citizens should apply independently of the area of the world in which their data is being processed".

Space Know-How "Can Help Predict" Natural Disasters

Space technology and exploration could be used to help mitigate loss of life and damage caused by natural disasters, a conference in Brussels was told.

The event on Monday heard that last summer's devastating fires in Russia, which killed thousands of people, would have been "even worse" but for the use of technology normally used in outer space.

Musa Manarov, a Russian cosmonaut, said, "The international community ought to be giving more attention to the possible application of space technology in such circumstances. It can be used not only to mitigate the consequences of earthquakes, floods and other natural disasters but, possibly, also predict these events. It has great potential".

He was speaking by satellite from Moscow in a debate in Brussels with senior officials from the EU institutions to mark the 50th anniversary of the first manned spaceflight.

Decision Imminent on Extra Security Near EU Buildings

Details of additional security measures to protect the area around EU institutions are set to be announced in a "few weeks", an official working in the cabinet of Brussels Mayor Freddy Thielemans has said.

"There is a working group made up of EU and Belgian officials which meets regularly on the subject. In a few weeks we will make an announcement," Nicolas Dassonville told on 16 March.

How far ranging any new measures may be has yet to be finalised. The working group was set up last year following a request for greater security from European Parliament President Jerzy Buzek.

The Polish politician called on Belgian authorities to create a special security zone around EU institutions, with some parliamentary officials complaining that thieves were specifically targeting the city's European quarter.

Court Only Option Against Swift Agreement, Says MEP

The EU Commission on 17 March downplayed data protection concerns over a deal allowing bulk banking data to be transferred to the US for anti-terrorism investigations, leaving a legal challenge over 'data mining' and privacy breaches as the only option for MEPs willing to continue the fight.

In a "tense" meeting behind closed doors, Home Affairs Commissioner Cecilia Malmstrom fended off criticism from MEPs who the previous day had decried the "betrayal" of EU institutions after they had given their consent to the controversial Swift agreement.

Malmstrom presented a review of the first six months since the deal came into force, which "only got us more worried," German Green MEP Jan Philipp Albrecht told this website after the meeting.

"Things have become more clear now, they accept big bulk data being sent over to the US and to be searched via algorithms - which basically means data mining. I said this is unconstitutional, according to the European Court of Justice and the German Constitutional Court," he explained.

Parliament Security Firm Also Provides Services to Israeli Settlements

The security company that services the European Parliament also provides security to Israeli checkpoints and settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories, it can be revealed.

Anglo-Danish outfit G4S, the world's largest security firm, has for days now been at the centre of a storm of criticism from politicians in Denmark, including the Interior Minister, after the company's activities in the Middle East became widely known.

The firm has provided equipment for Israel in the West Bank and Gaza, including scanning machines at the Bethlehem and Qalandiya checkpoints, and also delivered a security system to settlement police near the colony of Ma'ale Adumim.

The company also offers safety equipment at the checkpoints on the Separation Wall, a barrier Israel says is necessary to prevent terrorist attacks but which is also being built on occupied land in violation of international law. Critics charge Israel of using the fence to annex Palestinian land.

Smart Tags to Be Tested for Privacy Breaches

The EU and industry on 6 April agreed to take a closer look at how electronic identification tags could infringe citizens' privacy by establishing a set of tests to be carried out before the tags are put on the market.

Since May 2009 the European Commission has been talking to civil society groups, industry, privacy and data protection watchdogs and the European Network Information Security Agency to come up with ways to address security concerns around Radio Frequency Identification (RFID) or smart tags.

Since their invention, the tags have become a pervasive part of daily life and can be found in contactless travel passes, hospital patients' wrist bands and in more unusual places like implants in the hands of VIP guests to night clubs.

The 'Privacy and Data Protection Impact Assessment (PIA) Framework for RFID Applications', signed on 6 April, establishes a methodology to assess and mitigate the privacy risks of smart tags that can be applied by all industry sectors that use the tags.
